SNAKES GIVEN RATS TO GAGE APPETITE

Rodent in Luck When Snake Isn't Hungry.

All animals, birds and other inhabitants of the Zoo have a regular time for feeding with the exception of the snakes. "When do you feed the snakes?" was asked of one of the keepers yesterday in the lion house, where the snakes are harbored.

"That all depends," he answered, "sometimes we feed them on Tuesday or Thursday or, in fact, their feed day may come most any time. You see," he added, "we never feed them until they get hungry and that may be a week or two, and in some cases four weeks. It all depends on the snake."

"Well how can you tell when they are hungry?"

"We just throw in a rat and if the snake eats it he is still on his fast," remarked a second keeper, with a twinkle in his eye.

"Do you feed them rats?"

"Yes, indeed," said the first keeper. "Sometimes if the snake is a small one we give it a mouse or two, or if it is an extra large snake we give them two or three rats. Sometimes, if they are good, we give them an egg for dessert. A snake eats a regular meal when he does eat, because he does not come to the table often."

"They will eat most any kind of a small animal, but we usually give them rodents because they are easy to catch and it helps to keep the Zoo's grocery bill down."

It was learned that the size of the snake does not effect the length of the time it abstains from food. Some eat every week, while others go for several weeks, and there seems to be no system of determining their appetites. "Thinking that probably some of the snakes had established long records for non-eat periods, the reporter asked the first keeper how long a snake could refrain from eating."

"Some snakes," he said, "might, in a test case, go for three or four weeks, while others could go for a couple of months. But we cannot answer exactly because the only way we could tell would be to starve him to death. The data obtained in this way would not apply to any other snake and statistics on a dead snake would be of little value."

PLENTY OF OYSTERS IN PROSPECT HERE

Dealers Expect No Shortage or Higher Prices.

The outlook for a plentiful supply of oysters this season is considered favorable by the leading Washington dealers. Their opinion is based upon personal observation and reports made by State Inspectors from Maryland and Virginia.

While no large shipments have been received at the oyster wharves so far, it was said yesterday that a dozen or more oysters were expected to arrive by next Saturday. The masters who have been buying from planters, it was said, were remaining in lower waters awaiting the chance to purchase from tongers.

Prices will remain about the same, it is believed, until the opening of the dredging season, October 15. After that date vessels bringing the bivalves from Hampton Roads and the Potomac and its tributaries, will be able to sell cheaper. They obtain "free" or rock oysters.

C. H. Weser, a dealer here, said yesterday he was confident that oysters would not only be plentiful this season, but would also be unusually large and juicy.

Not Raised in Forty Years.

"The price of oysters among large dealers in Washington," said Weser, "has never been raised in forty years. I anticipate the oyster market to be plentiful this year and the price will remain the same as before. This is the only commodity sold in Washington markets which has not been affected in price for so long a time."

In this connection, Weser stated that his opinion of oysters next season may bring the highest price in history and it was possible that in a few years it would be practically impossible to get them.

"The only way to prevent a complete shortage of crabs here," said Weser, "is for the States of Maryland and Virginia to prohibit the dredging of crabs, beginning November 1, and ending June 1. The small ones are being taken for use and this is bound to bring about a shortage. This year dealers were compelled to pay $4 a gallon for lump meat, something unusual here. A large storm next season is certain to affect prices."

Wick, thirty body-bearers, also of the Dolphin, a bugler, and petty officers, and four caissons from Battery A, D. C. National Guard, manned by National Guardsmen.

NEGRO CHARGED WITH CHEST OF GOLD THEFT

William C. Robinson, colored, aged 27, was taken into custody yesterday morning by Detective O'Brien, Evans and Mullen, on a warrant charging him with the theft of $500 from an employer in Loudoun County, Va.

He was held as a fugitive from justice, and was last night turned over to Deputy Sheriff Harry J. Leslie, of Loudoun County.

The victim of the alleged robbery is said to be a woman living near Hillsboro, Va. It is said that she kept a large sum of money in a chest in her home, much of it in gold, and that the chest was taken from the house.
